HONGKONG, MONDAY, SEPT. 20, 1869.

WE are so accustomed to movements in the East which, under the designations of "changes," "progress," &c., go to make up the history of the decade, that when any specially notable event takes place we are apt to overlook its importance. We very much doubt whether if the long-talked of experimental railway is for foreign comment than an impassive got so into the habit of considering that every forward movement is part of a pre-ordained plan, necessarily following foreign intercourse with China, that we are in danger of not realizing the vast change in its public opinion which must have been previously effected. By the Shanghai papers just to hand we read that Mr Porter, of the Imperial Maritime Customs, having at his own expense imported two steam engines, working pumps and agricultural implements into Peking, a resident Pekingese has purchased one of the two, which has been satisfactorily exhibited to a large circle of honestly admiring natives.

Let us pause for a moment and compare the Peking of 1859 with that of 1869. Closed at the former date to the foreign ministers, and in the hands of a party whose cry was death to foreigners, less than ten years have elapsed to find such inventions as gas, steam, and electricity not merely exhibited, but availed of, or complacently regarded as future aids of material welfare! The wildest dreams of the "Old Factory" residents scarcely dared to reach such a height. With our many indictments against the Chinese, we cannot but acknowledge that, slow as is their progress, an appreciable step in advance has been made since the days when Yeh defied our power, or, the native gunners of the Taku forts beat off, as they fondly hoped, the strongest force we could bring against them. As theroughly opposed to the anti-progressive political character of the nation, we are the more struck with the change in public opinion which must have taken place at Peking to permit a native, however influential, to openly exhibit a machine which almost may be said to represent in Chinese eyes the secret of foreign power. For vast as are the real achievements of steam, it is invested with even more wonderful attributes in a Chinaman's imagination. He is told that our cloth, our paper, and half the articles of common use, are produced by its aid, and utterly unable to comprehend the mere use of power, his mind endues the magic engine with a sort of supernatural intelligence. Though events have long been paving the way for breaking down the barriers which have hitherto so jealously excluded even the sight of foreign machinery from the Capital, it is no small thing to have been the individual who has chosen the time and means to bring this alteration in public feeling to a practical result, and we may fitly conclude in the words of the Tientain correspondent of the North China Daily News - Mr Porter deserves great praise for having introduced these things, at his own risk and expense; and it is pleasant also to see that the Chinese government have made no objection to their introduction, even into Peking. May we be able to look upon the introduction of steam machinery into the Capital, in so peaceful a manner, as the dawn of a better day for China."

WE notice that a statement is going the rounds of the papers to the effect that the "Russian and Chinese Commissioners, appointed to trace the frontier between the two empires, have met at the military station of Oakek, in Eastern

While the interest opinion (if that is of much account in the of the new statute lies yet in the future i case) has I think been setting against the may be convenient to enumerate the changes it will introduce into the ecolesias tical aspect of Ireland. What has it done already? What will it do by and by

The immediate results of the Act are neither many nor conspicuous. For the the policy: and that in a rather emphatic | the Irish Church will be substantially unaltered. The parliamentary union between it and the Church of England will continue to subsist, ecclesiastical corporations will His retain their accustomed status and posses sions, the ecolesiastical courts will exercise their accustomed jurisdiction, and the Irisl accepted as sufficient proof of this; but bishops will take their accustomed turns in the House of Lorks. GREAT demonstration in isvour of a union or alliance between the Scandinavian States of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway was held near Copenhagen a few days ago. Ten thousand Swedes, Danes, and Norwegians assembled. This great meeting was in every sense a representative one. There was a delegate from the extreme west of Jutland, another from the far north of Norway, and three Danish patriots came from Schleswig. Speeches were delivered in all three languages. The necessity of a political union between the Scandinavian States was jurged as the only means of insuring them from aggressions of their powerful neighbours, and the expediency of developing their maval and military forces was strongly insisted on. The Scandinavians, like the more southern people of are beginning to learn that unity is strength.
